ABSTRACT

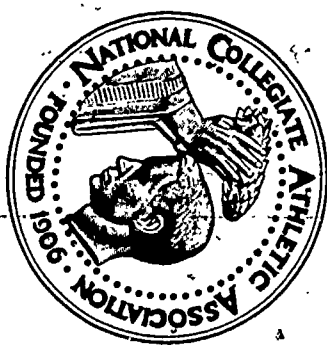

The National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Special Committee on Length of Season was established to collect data through the use of survey questionnaires from the NCAA membership so that the relationship between the data and the growing concern regarding economy in intercollegiate athletics could be assessed. This report contains the data obtained from the members who responded. The results were tabulated according to team and individual sports, and geographic divisions of NCAA membership. Included in team sports are baseball, basketball, football, ice hockey, lacrosse, soccer, volleyball, and water polo. Included in individual sports are cross country, fencing, golf, gymnastics, skiing, swimming, tennis, indoor track, outdoor track, and wrestling. The data for team sports include items on length of season, preseason practice, in season practice, out-of-season practice, size of squad, and number of coaches. The data for individual sports covers length of season, practice during the year, days away from campus, size of squad, and number of coaches. In addition, general responses for all sports are given concerning length of academic year, and the five sports in the program that demand the most time from the student.

SURVEY BY NCAA SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON LENGTH OF SEASON

BACKGROUND

The NCAA Special Committee on Length of Season was appointed as a result of two recommendations received by the NCAA Council at its May 1974 meeting. The NCAA College Committee recommended that a study be conducted as to the length of season, number of contests and size of squad in all sports, and the Division I Steering Committee recommended a study of spring football practice and out-of-season practice in other sports.

The Council authorized the appointment of a special committee to conduct a study of these matters, and the committee was appointed by the Officers in July 1974. Those serving on the committee were:

Franklin A. Lindeburg, University of California,
Riverside, chairman
Cecil N. Coleman, University of Illinois, Champaign
David B. Eavenson, Dickinson College
Ralph E. Fadum, North Carolina State University
Edwin P. Horner, Baylor University
Fred Jacoby, Mid-American Conference
George Schubert, University of North Dakota
David Strack, University of Arizona
Robert B. Watson, Harvard University

While the study was being planned in the fall of 1974, the relationship between the proposed survey topics and the growing concern regarding economy in intercollegiate athletics became apparent. Consequently, the purposes of the study were broadened and refined as follows:

1. To consider the effects of season length, squad size, number of contests and number of coaches on the economics of conducting an athletic program; particularly in light of current post increases and continuing inflation.

2. To evaluate the amount of time a student-athlete devotes to his sport, either at the demand of his coaches or of his own volition as an individual competitor, relating to the allegation that intercollegiate athletics detracts from the student-athlete's attention to his academic work and perhaps hampers his involvement in normal campus life.

THE SURVEY

The survey questionnaire was mailed to all active members of the Association January 17, 1975. The survey elicited responses from 66.1 per cent of the active membership, one of the best responses to an NCAA study ever recorded. The number of responses by district and by division is presented on page 4 of this publication.

The questionnaire requested specific information in the 18 sports in which the Association conducts national championship competition.

In the eight team sports (baseball, basketball, football, ice hockey, lacrosse, soccer, volleyball and water polo), these items were included: length of playing season, in days and in number of contests; preseason practice, including beginning date, number of practice sessions, days used for those sessions and length of each session; in-season practice, in terms of number of practices per week and days used for those practices; out-of-season practice, including length of practice period in days, number of practice sessions, days used for those sessions and length of each session; size of squad, total, number competing during season and number on traveling squad; and number of coaches, full-time and part-time.

In the ten individual sports, the survey items were as follows: Length of season, in terms of number of meets for the full team, number of meets with partial representation (one or more squad members participating), total number of meets, length of season in days, and additional days required for "best performers"; all practice during year, in number of days from first to last practice and in average number of hours per week; days away from campus, for typical performer and "best" performer; size of squad, total, number competing during season and number of traveling squad; and number of coaches, full-time and part-time.

In addition, the questionnaire asked a number of general questions. Among these were the beginning and ending dates of the academic year; the institution's attitude toward spring football practice; the five sports in its program that the institution believes are most demanding of a student-athlete's time; and an opportunity to express the institution's opinion regarding sports in which limitations or restrictions might be needed, as well as other suggestions regarding economy in intercollegiate athletics.

The tabulation of responses to those questionnaire items was considered by the Special Committee on Length of Season in meetings held April 6-7 and May 17-18, 1975. Its recommendations were considered by the NCAA Council in its April 21-23 and June 8-9, 1975, meetings. Certain of those recommendations were reflected in the legislative proposals to be considered by the Special NCAA Convention August 14-15, 1975.

THE TABULATION

The tabulation presented in this publication enables the reader to determine by sport the average or median information, based on survey responses, for each item on the questionnaire, within each district and each division, as well as nationwide. For example, in the sport of baseball (pages 8-9), the national average was 31.4 games played (a high of 75, a low of 10) in a 55-day period (high of 247 days, low of 17 days). The median for preseason practice was 42 days before the first game, with an average 29.1 practice sessions in 28.6 days (indicating a small incidence of two-a-day practices). The average preseason practice session is 119.1 minutes in length. During the season, the typical team holds four practice sessions in 3.9 days, again reflecting a small percentage of institutions with more than one session in a day. A total of 49.2 per cent of the respondents conduct out-of-season practice, averaging 25.8 practices using 25.7 days in a 40-day period, with the typical practice session lasting 115.1 minutes. The total baseball squad averaged 26.0 players, with 22.9 actually competing during the season and an average of 20.3 on the traveling squad. The average baseball coaching staff is 1.9 persons, consisting of 1.2 full-time and 0.7 part-time.

Comparable figures are presented for each sport and for each division, and for each district (or combination of districts) within each division. The sport-by-sport tabulations are presented on pages 8 through 43 of this publication. (See Table of Contents, page 3.)

On pages 44 and 45 are the tabulations of the general survey questions. Page 44 presents the median starting and ending dates of the academic year for each district and each division, and the number of calendar days included. The percentages of respondents favoring abolition and retention of spring football practice are also listed on that page, as well as the percentage that do not play football and those not responding to that question. The sport's ranked by the institutions as the most demanding of a student-athlete's time are tabulated on a 5-4-3-2-1 ranking, with five points recorded for the sport listed as most demanding by each institution.

On page 45 is a summary of the respondents' opinions regarding possible limitations or restrictions on the seven basic survey topics. Some respondents specified restrictions on all sports; some mentioned only certain sports.

It was the feeling of the Special Committee and the NCAA Council that the results of the survey could prove helpful to any member institution in determining how its program in any sport compares with others in its division and/or district.
